In multiplayer, base building will appear to a small extent, and each race will receive a global ability upgrade unit. In addition, a creature that appeared in Heroes of Might & Magic II: The Return of Ra's Al Ghul will be removed from the game. The resources obtained from the races were distributed among the playable characters, characters and heroes. Each race has received 15 health points and increases the damage resistance of all physical and magical effects by 3 points. When interacting with a standard magic move, the rapa energy used up 40 health points every 10 seconds for 8 seconds. Druids received 35 health points for every 10 potions they drank. Leadership skills changed the balance of power, once again greatly increasing the number of mages in battles. The game will use three stimulant spells: "Brightness", "Power" and "Spiritual Spark". Their color is white or gold, and the name is "Brightness", "Spirit" and "Sparks". The color and name of each spell will change. Changes will affect game performance with increased strength and acceleration. Previously, it was planned that the new game will have "Acceleration" and new magical abilities, such as "Charge" and some others. However, the developers left the opportunity to see these abilities in the new version of the game. It was planned that after the development of the game, the characters would no longer return to it, but some of them nevertheless began to play. These include Siddiqi and Knopa. Notable developers who have worked with Brave include Dave Baron, Rick Whitley, who were responsible for the game logic, and Brian Bonneville, who was responsible for building the military systems and interface. Brian stated that the release of the game will be final, despite the fact that he was unable to work with The Elder Scrolls Online. He also expressed his hope that "The World of Warships" has not yet been released, and the game does not have a large number of pre-orders."The Warhammer 40,000: Conquest" was nominated for "Rare Game" by Electronic Gaming Monthly in "Most Anticipated Game of 2012". "The Legend of Heroes: Warhammered 40, 000 - Conquest" received fairly high marks from both critics and players, who described the game as an impressive work on an RPG, and often called it one of the
