Apparent carrier rate with application of probe-directed mutation analysis. Sixty-four probe-directed mutations were screened in six regions of the HLA-DQA locus and in five regions of the HLA-DQB locus for segregation with thyroid-associated autoimmune disease using an automated DNA analysis system. Apparent carrier rates of 0.9% to 1.2% were observed at a defined

HLA class II background for DQalpha exon 2 (DQbeta exons 1 and 2), DQalpha exon 3, and DQbeta exon 2 in members of a few multiplex families. The probes were subsequently synthesized and tested in nine additional multiplex families at various HLA-DQ backgrounds. At these locations, apparent carrier rates were 0% to 1.2%. Three additional probes were designed to cover a region at one end of the DQalpha gene with a coverage rate of 89.2% to 100%. Use of this region demonstrated that apparent carrier rates of 0% to 1.2% at a defined HLA-
