Q: How does one change an unmodifiable dictionary in a Swift4 playground? I am trying to figure out how I can change an unmodifiable dictionary in a Swift4 playground. I tried to follow this guide in and with no luck I still have the same problem. Here is a sample code I have and it is giving me a "Thread 1: Fatal error: Unexpectedly found nil while unwrapping an Optional value" at the line Dim result = dict. Where did I go wrong? import Foundation class Person: CustomStringConvertible { var name = "" var age = 0 init(name:String, age:Int){ self.name = name self.age = age } override func description(indent: Int) -> String { return "" } } let resultDict: [String: Person] = ["Dave":Person(name:"Dave", age:42)] /* var dict: [String: Person] = [:] dict["Dave"] = Person(name:"Dave", age:42) */ //After changing this line I get the error in question above resultDict[name] = Person(name:"Grace", age:32) A: The key thing here is that dictionaries in Swift are unordered, and therefore do not retain keys in insertion order. The fact that the documentation doesn't mention this is part of the problem. So, when you're calling dict.update, your attempt to insert Dave before Grace fails, because Dave is nowhere in the dictionary. If you're absolutely sure that your document should always have the order Dave, Grace then you could do something like: var resultDict: [String: Person] = [:] let name = "Dave" resultDict[name] = Person(name: name, age: 42) resultDict[name].age = 32 There are obviously lots of other ways to do this, but using update and string interpolation the Nideq Publishing House, Osaka, Japan. Sakaibara et al., in US 2002/0173744 describe a lead-free solder paste that comprises finely powdered lead bismuth alloy (e.g. about 10-27% by weight of lead, about 5-40% by weight bismuth, about 0.3-9% by weight tin, up to about 5% by weight of a fluxing agent). White et al. in US 2005/0145591 describe a solder paste that comprises a composite paste that includes particles of a filler metal that on average are spherical in shape and have an equivalent diameter (d) of from about 8 to about 80 nm. Luo et al. in US 2005/0208198 describe a solder paste with embedded palladium particles. Gray et al. in U.S. Pat. No. 6,822,268 disclose a technique that uses carbon containing microspheres to remove flux residue left after a solder reflow, wherein carbon enables high temperature cleaning but inhibits low temperature lead diffusion into the printed circuit board. While a relatively large amount of lead can be reclaimed, industry would benefit from a technique that can reclaim even more lead. The above-identified references are incorporated herein by reference in their entireties. The present invention relates to a semiconductor memory device, and more particularly to a semiconductor device comprising a nonvolatile memory cell. A so-called non-volatile memory cell is a semiconductor device comprising a data-storing element that is electrically insulated from a semiconductor substrate. The data-storing element is capable of maintaining stored data even when the power supply of the semiconductor device is turned off. Conventionally, the data-storing elements are formed of a tunnel oxide film, a floating gate, and a dielectric film arranged in the order named from the substrate side. Japanese Unexamined Patent Application No. Hei 5(1993)-179869 discloses a semiconductor device having a conductive film that serves as a control gate formed through an interlevel
