I had been involved with CF for almost two years before I learned that you need a specific certification to compete in sanctioned CrossFit competitions. I had actually only been to one sanctioned competition, which was the Folsom CrossFit Games in February 2012. I got to see how the workouts were put together, but by the time I registered at Folsom, I was seriously overwhelmed by the number of boxes I had to choose from. As a result, I decided to register at CrossFit Olathe, which is a small box. I liked it there, but soon I wanted to go to bigger boxes. I'd heard that the International Olympic Commission was starting to certify CrossFit and their hope was to make CrossFit more prevalent than only the two CrossFit Games. At that point, I wanted to be able to compete against the pros at CrossFit. A few months later, I took a trip to San Jose where I had the opportunity to visit Planet Fitness during their opening day. In December 2012, Level 5 released Inazuma Eleven GO Strikers 2013, a soccer game featuring characters from their 2012 inazuma eleven series.À The game received positive reviews. For players of the Nintendo Wii, it was released in Japan, on December 20, 2012, and in the United States on December 22, 2012. The game is played on several stages, including the usual field, stadium, and village areas. Players can choose to play against computer opponents or human players on the local network, and the server can be used to play against others. Players can create teams, choose their characters, practice and training their skills, and race against the clock. The new feature of the game is that players can use a new power-up item called the 'Strikers, which lets them improve their character's ability to strike the ball. Players can also run past the ball or through the goalkeeper to score. One of the characters, Haru, can play as a striker in the game. After inazuma eleven 2 strikers, a few weeks before the release of GO Strikers, an anime called Striker Uprising was created by Level-5. Striker Uprising is set in the same universe as Inazuma Eleven, and can be played on Wii. The anime was released on March 26, 2013. Inazuma Eleven GO Strikers 2013 Wii ISO The difficulty level of the game is geared towards the simulation. Players can choose a difficulty level to suit their skills and the number of players on their team. The difficulty levels are: Beginner (easy) for beginners and easy, Expert (normal) for experts, and Master (difficult) for experts and advanced players. A game mode called "Instruction Mode" was also created. This allows players to practice against computer-controlled opponents. Instruction Mode is designed to help players create a team that plays well together. The game uses the Wii Remote to control the characters on-screen. The character "Mia" is actually a button for "Space" in some games. Players can use the Wii Remote to strike the ball with their character and can also control the goalie. Players can also use a Solar Panel to recharge their batteries during the day, while a Wind Turbine can be used to recharge their batteries during the night. During the day, all players can enter the goalkeeper's area, which acts as a break. Players can use the Solar Panel or a Wind Turbine
