For the third time in four years, President Obama will be hosting a White House Correspondents' Association (WHCA) dinner, an annual event that celebrates the First Amendment and features the White House as the punch line. Reporters and photographers from all over the world attend the annual event, which features a celebrity roast, comedian jokes and a dance party. Since taking office, the Obama administration has been one of the most hostile to free speech and the press in modern American history. Last year, White House Correspondents' Association (WHCA) president Jeff Mason declared that the president was "killing the WHCA dinner." This year is no different. This year, the WHCA expects many Democrats to boycott the dinner in protest of the president's State of the Union address. No one seems to be talking about a "#ObamaNoDinner" boycott like they did last year, but it sure seems like that would be a good idea. Last year, WHCA president Jeff Mason encouraged Obama to "set the record straight" by speaking at the dinner. According to Mason: "[President Obama's] silence is fueling suspicion, paranoia and a siege mentality among people of the press. The president has not addressed a major free press conference since May 2011 and seldom answers direct questions from press. It's not good for democracy, good for the president and good for the country... I encourage the president to set the record straight." As the WHCA made clear last year, they endorsed Obama's right to free speech, even if they don't like what he is saying. According to Mason's bizarre logic, it is President Obama's duty to use his podium at the dinner to defang the free press. He used the podium to lecture the press about the size of their fonts in the second term and he turned the podium into a prop in his reelection campaign. When his press secretary is refusing to take questions and has become a sitting duck, you have to wonder why the WHCA continues to give Obama a forum. At least this year, there is a chance that President Obama will not be there to watch the WHCA roast the free press. According to the White House, the president will not attend this year's dinner. The WHCA has been very coy about the change, telling the press that it is an internal
