Program to look up the exact address for one place, even if it may have different postal codes. in a map, give the coordinates of the address you enter.Q: String length in F2F terminology I've been trying to read F2F documents, and I've been unable to find a decent explanation of the terminology "string length". I've found this: from: W3C User Guide: Strings The length of a string is the number of code units in the string. However, there is no mention of what a code unit is. Can someone explain, or point me to a reference, or provide another definition? A: From the Wikipedia article on Unicode code points: ... a code point is the smallest addressable unit of the Unicode encoding. (...) In the UTF-16 encoding, which is used for Unicode, a code point is referred to as a 16-bit unit.[4] So in UTF-16, a string is a sequence of code points (the representation of a string in UTF-16 is as a pair of code units), and each code point can be represented by a 16 bit unsigned integer, for a total length of 65536 bits (not bytes). go." "I need something to help me not to see my son... whenever I look at him." "Helps." "I didn't really need to come for something to make me feel better." "Then why did you come?" "Why do you still call me "Mom"?" "Huh?" "Why do you call me "Mom"?" "Oh, look at that!" "Oh!" "Mm-hmm!" "I'm sure you'll like this." "Our offer is here." "We appreciate you not revealing any information about us." "Here's where we want you to put all the surveillance equipment." "That's right in the middle of the room, directly across from us." "The fireman, Tomas, will be watching this live feed." "And he'll be here to move the equipment if it starts to cause a problem." "Here's where we want you to put the cameras." "You guys go get some coffee." "We'll be watching from here, and we'll see you in a few minutes." "Go." "You
