A cyan-emitting diode (LED) may be used as a light-emitting device in a backlight of a display panel, for example. The LED may be used with other display panels that are illuminated to display content. Typically, the blue light emitted by the LED is mixed with red and green light produced by phosphors coated on respective subpixels, to achieve a high color gamut. However, a typical LED may include only red and green phosphors as its phosphors. Accordingly, there may be a lack of blue light output by the LED. Further, the typical LED may not be capable of generating desirable spectra of different colors. For example, a phosphor-coated white LED may display a color gamut that is different from that of other LEDs of a different color. A color gamut refers to the color gamut of a device that displays content, and is expressed in a color space. Typical LED may have less than 65% chromaticity of the gamut of the human eye. Hence, the color gamut of the typical LED may be limited and the power efficiency thereof may be low. (- 2 4 3) / 1 2 a m u l t i p l e o f 3 ?
