We are about to use the open terminal as a control system. We have a panel on which we set up the terminal and run a script/fs. Then the panel sends the data to a server. Could you comment on the feasibility of this method? A: "Who came first: the Internet or the mobile device?" It is a bit like asking who came first, Me or The Mob. Without detailed information, it's impossible to answer this question. You need to identify what you want to do, and then ask the right people. Some (very general) approaches. You can write a script/fs and control the open terminal from that. You'd write it as a function, and run it from a shell script. You can use something like Procotors "terminal app" to use the terminal that is already present on the panel.
