How Do I Know If I'm Being Infested By Ants In My Household? How do I know if I have ants in my home? It's normal for ants to walk on your food in your kitchen and drink water. They do this to find food and drink. Be sure you have a clean food source such as milk, butter, or bread. In your garage they will crawl all over and gather food all over. When they find new food sources, they will set up what's called an ant trail. This is a small path they follow to get to the food. They will drop granules on the trail to help the others find the food. They will also have a huge mound of soil on your house. They usually travel about a foot-and-a-half per ant per week. They also like to set up mounds. Ants will set up mounds to defend themselves when they feel they are about to be attacked. As an ant colony gets bigger, they will make paths leading out to other areas in your home. If your kitchen or other food areas are covered with ant trails and mounds, you have an ant problem. A common symptom of ant infestation is seeing ants crawling on food. If you use ant bait, this may make them easier to see. Usually you will first see them in the garage or under your sink. If you see ants in your kitchen, they are most likely new house ants. They start out as the Eastern colonies and when they infest your house, they form a Southern colony. They are usually found in the kitchen or garage area where food is. As they get larger, you will notice the trails and mounds on your house. The house ants will also be in your attic and crawl spaces. You will see them in the bedrooms in the evening, around baths and in the laundry room. If you see a large number of ants you can check your food supplies and also look in drains. You will see them around garbage. They will also travel along walls, under doors, and in attics. They can leave a tunnel in the walls of your house that should be inspected. You can also pull down tiles to check for them. You will usually see them on walls and in ceilings around plumbing and electrical wiring. If you see ants in your home, you need to find out if it is termites. Termites can also crawl in your food supplies, have food supplies around your home
