Pretreatment of male mice with 100 mg/kg of ethylenimine 1 h before exposure to 5,000 cGy X-rays resulted in 10, 25, and 20 per cent reductions in the LD50, respectively, of the radiotoxic agent methyl mercuric chloride and the non-radiotoxic agent sodium methylate. The interaction of ethylenimine with radiation was not affected by the ability of the agent to protect against the killing effect of 5,000 cGy X-irradiation of unanesthetized mice. Animals pretreated with ethylenimine and then exposed to methyl mercury chloride received 70 and 30 per cent, respectively, of the dose given to those receiving methyl mercury chloride alone. Ethylenimine was shown to inhibit the binding of methyl mercury to the liver but could not prevent methyl mercury binding to the kidney. In mice given a high dose of ethylenimine (200 mg/kg), the LD50 value of methyl mercury increased from 750 to 2000 mg/kg, but was similar to the value obtained in animals not pretreated with ethylenimine. Comparison of a range of doses of ethylenimine showed that, in mice, the LD50 value of methyl mercury was higher at the lower doses tested (100 and 200 mg/kg) than at 400 and 800 mg/kg. It is concluded that at higher doses of ethylenimine protection against methyl mercury toxicity may be afforded by this agent and that the reduced toxicity observed with lower doses could result from saturating protection.// Copyright 2013 The Go Authors. Download to your PC .Q: Sharepoint iFrame and Sharepoint host application I am wondering if there is a way to share content between the Sharepoint host application (Client Components) and the Sharepoint iFrame. Here is the scenario: The user navigates to a page in his Sharepoint application. His user/login credentials are checked in his Sharepoint host application and if successfully authenticated he is taken to a custom page. The custom page however is hosted in an iFrame and would like to provide the user with some content from the Sharepoint host application. Is this possible? How would you approach this issue? A: From what I understand of your question, you can have users log in to the Sharepoint application you're using and then use the login credentials to log into the Sharepoint iFrame. If this is the case, have a look at this link: Q: Set the default dateTime format in Java? I want to set the dateTime format in Java. I want to set: "yyyy-MM-dd'T'hh:mm:ssZZZZZ" How to set it in Java? A: Call SimpleDateFormat format = new SimpleDateFormat("yyyy-MM-dd'T'hh:mm:ssZZZZZ"); I also recommend to use ZZZZ to avoid unexpected results if you use non-latin languages, for example "de_DE" or
