I used to use the room temperature milk from my DMP. When I moved to San Diego and was getting ready to feed K, I was told to keep the milk at room temp. At first, I pumped and then cooled in ice and then fed when my milk came in. But I hate the sound of the pump, and the fact that I had to worry about the milk being colder than room temp. I bought the magic bottle and it is similar to DMP except I can't shake the milk without getting it all over myself. Since then, I have been exclusively breastfeeding without expressing at the breast because pumping is so messy. But now I'm breastfeeding again and I don't have an expression cup for this session. There is no way to get milk out of the bottle without it splattering. I'm trying to focus on cleaning up, but I also want to practice letting go. I guess I would like some suggestions for what to do if the milk splatters all over me, and also what to do with the nearly empty bottles. I normally use the bottle brush and then just flush the rest of it down the bathroom drain. I love this board. Please help. Re: Does anyone use Baby Magic? Baby magic is great and it's totally up to your preference, whether or not you want to express at the breast. I just love being able to use the bottle brush. It's kinda like an expression cup if you have a huge dripper. I use a cup and just dump the milk in a cup. It all goes back in the bag. I don't know if you have been reading all the questions on here but there is lots of advice and people are very happy with the magic. I hate working the pump so this works for me 6d1f23a050
