The effects of crude oil and vinasse on the branchiopod species Artemia franciscana and Cloeon dipterum. The effects of crude oil and vinasse on branchiopod development were examined in juveniles of Artemia franciscana and Cloeon dipterum, with special emphasis on the branchial pumping movements, hatching time, and swimming activity. Freshly hatched nauplii were exposed to different concentrations of crude oil, vinasse, and their mixture, for up to 96 h, and their subsequent development was assessed in terms of hatching percentage, locomotion (stirring or swimming), larval duration, fecundity, and swimming activity. Nauplii of both species exhibited a decrease in swimming activity 6d1f23a050
