There has been controversy regarding the role of CA125 in the diagnosis, follow-up, and treatment of patients with endometrial carcinoma. The aim of this study was to determine whether the serum CA125 level in patients with endometrial carcinoma is elevated compared with that in controls without endometrial carcinoma. We also examined the relationship between the CA125 level and the stage of the disease and the response to treatment. This was a case-control study. The cases and controls were recruited from women with endometrial carcinoma who were admitted to the Department of Gynecology and Obstetrics, Turgut Ozal University, General Hospital. The cases had histopathologically confirmed endometrial carcinoma that was diagnosed between November 1, 2008, and March 31, 2009, and the controls had no endometrial carcinoma and were recruited as individuals who visited the hospital for a regular medical checkup. The CA125 levels were measured in blood samples collected on the first day of the admission. The mean values of the CA125 levels in the controls and the endometrial carcinoma patients were 12.1 ± 10.2 U/mL and 58.6 ± 31.5 U/mL, respectively (P
