Additionally, even if we assume that the truthfulness of the allegations in the complaint is controlling, the complaint in this case would fail. As we have already noted, the complaint alleges no connection between the defendants and the forum state other than the fact that they each sent the complaint to the forum state. In a diversity suit, the plaintiff must establish both general and specific personal jurisdiction. Venu, 145 F.3d at 1248. General personal jurisdiction applies to all litigation, regardless of whether the suit's relationship to the forum state is related to the cause of action. Id. In order to establish general personal jurisdiction, the plaintiff must prove two elements: (1) the defendant must be domiciled in, or maintain its principal place of business in, the forum state; and (2) the cause of action must arise from the defendant's activities in the forum state. Id. at 1249. In this case, the district court determined that the defendants were not domiciled in, or maintain their principal place of business in, Colorado. Indeed,
