A shift in the dominant mode of HSP70 gene expression in response to heat shock: analysis of the intact transcriptional unit. The differential expression of HSP70 gene family members in rat liver in response to heat shock has previously been examined using a Southern blot assay with a 1.4 kb EcoRI-PstI DNA fragment of the HSP70B' gene that contains four canonical heat shock elements (HSEs). We have developed a strategy using differential display PCR to separate and identify species of RNA that are differentially expressed following a 10 min heat shock. A major transcript, HSP70', was observed to be specifically induced following heat shock and it also contains HSEs. The structure of the HSP70B' gene, however, makes it unlikely that this species of RNA would be translated. We present evidence that a 1.3 kb transcript of the HSP70A gene (HSP70/S) is induced by heat stress and this transcript contains HSEs. It is, therefore, likely to encode a functional protein that could participate in the heat shock response. HSP70/S was found to be present in unstressed animals and to be elevated by heat shock. A second mRNA species, HSP70/L, is induced by heat shock in the liver and it too contains HSEs. Expression of this transcript was found to be restricted to the liver, consistent with previous
