The present invention relates generally to transfer controllers for use in apparatus for recording a control track on a magnetic medium, such as a magnetic tape. It is well known in the magnetic tape recording art to employ a transfer head for transferring data to and from a magnetic medium, such as a magnetic tape. For example, a transfer head may be utilized for transferring write signals from a head to the medium, or for reading signals from the medium. In general, it is desirable that the transfer head be positioned to the center of the medium when in use to ensure accurate data transfer. In the past, it has been the practice to employ a single transfer head to accomplish data transfer to and from the medium. While the utilization of a single transfer head is satisfactory for many purposes, it is not suitable for use in high-speed tape drive applications. To enhance the use of magnetic tape in high-speed tape drives, it has been proposed to utilize a pair of transfer heads, one transfer head for writing data and the other transfer head for reading data. In such a system, it is preferable that the transfer heads be controlled in a coordinated manner so as to minimize data transfer errors. It is also desirable that the transfer heads be controlled independently of the drive system of the tape drive. If the heads are controlled by a drive system that is responsive to the tape drive, then the heads may be caused to remain at the same position as the tape drive head and data transfer errors may occur. Further, it is necessary that the transfer heads be controlled at a predetermined speed with respect to the surface of the medium. If the tape drive is not precisely synchronized with the transfer heads, it is possible that data transfer will be impeded. To solve this problem, it is desirable that the speed of the heads be precisely controlled. It is an object
