The adenovirus E1A oncoproteins interact with the product of the retinoblastoma tumor suppressor gene (pRb). E1A-pRb complexes inhibit retinoblastoma protein (pRB) binding to the E2F family of transcription factors, thereby preventing cell cycle progression from the G1 to the S phase. The herpes simplex virus-encoded VP1 protein binds to E1A and inhibits E1A-pRb interaction. While VP1 also inhibits pRB binding to E2F family members, it does not mediate E1A-induced pRb phosphorylation. We report that the AUR1/ZNF215 zinc finger protein binds the VP1 protein directly, and AUR1 has properties similar to that of E1A-pRb. Using transient expression assays, we have demonstrated that AUR1, but not ZNF215, can be phosphorylated by adenovirus E1A proteins, thereby facilitating nuclear localization. AUR1 can also suppress pRB-dependent transcription and can inhibit the in vitro assembly of an E1A-stimulated E2F transcription complex. Furthermore, AUR1 binds the G1 and S phase cyclin E (CCNE) proteins in a pRB-dependent manner. From the interactions between AUR1, VP1, and other cell cycle regulatory proteins, we hypothes
